He meets Priyanka and it is love at first sight for both. Will the lovers remain separated by circumstances? When you have Salman Khan playing a cop, it's difficult not to have a laugh. But a laugh is the only response for a movie that's somewhere between the horrible and the so-so. It opens with the usual, dumb title song and image-heavy plot-introduction. Priyanka Chopra's character is the big hit of a dance-club where Salman Khan's character also goes. The 'tunes' of this place have been imported from Bombay, so there's a party-like atmosphere. You know, people dancing around to slithery techno-house music, with the pretty girls wearing tight, shiny, black dresses with suggestive, open necklines. This is followed by a lot of cut-and-paste photography and a few colour-coded characters. 'Welcome to Mandoli' (Mandoli is the town where the movie is set), we're informed. The film shows us the sights and sounds of Mandoli, which seems pretty much like any other small town in India, except for the fact that every other building is covered with curtains. This opening is followed by a song and dance-number in which we learn that Priyanka's character is the only one allowed into the club. To emphasise this fact, the male lead, Akshay Kumar, is shown entering the club and dancing on stage with the audience, in full view of the people inside.
